Taylor and Walker, P.C. Announces a Four Day Work Week

Norfolk, VA -- On June 23, 2008, the law firm of Taylor & Walker, P.C. instituted a four day work week for full-time employees for both their Norfolk and Richmond offices. The four day work week program will run from June 23 throughout summer and is strictly voluntary. Employees choosing to keep a five day work schedule will be allowed to do so. The offices will remain open Monday through Friday.

The firm is offering the shortened work week in an attempt to help their employees cut their fuel costs. As the price of gas continues to rise, companies around the United States are looking at ways to help their employees cut their fuel cost. With this idea in mind, many companies have already gone to a four 10 hour day work week.

“In keeping with our philosophy of a creative and innovative workplace, we wanted to help our team members this summer with the recent increases in the cost of gasoline,” Managing Partner, Jim Brydges said. “With the average cost over $4 per gallon, we know this places an extra hardship on our team members. Since we attract team members from throughout the area, we want to do all we can to help.”

“By providing flexible four day work weeks, we hope to help our team members this summer deal with the high cost of fuel and to also provide them the opportunity for flexible days off for long weekends and time off with their family,” Brydges said.

“We trust that this will be seen as another great team member benefit that reinforces Taylor and Walker as a special place to work that truly brings more fun to life.”

About Taylor & Walker, P.C.

Taylor & Walker, P.C. was originally formed in 1974 as a general practice law firm to provide a broad range of legal services, with an emphasis on civil litigation. The firm attorneys are experienced in handling all types of litigation, including products liability, workers' compensation claims, professional malpractice, construction, commercial, employment, as well as personal injury claims and negligence actions of every nature. Taylor & Walker, P.C. also maintains an active practice advising both businesses and individuals on a wide variety of legal matters, including the formation and operation of corporations and other business entities; health care and hospital issues; the purchase and sale of businesses; and transactional matters generally.

The firm's clients include some of the country's largest insurers and underwriters; architects, engineers and physicians; general and trade contractors; and pest control operators. With offices in both Norfolk and Richmond, the firm is positioned to assist clients throughout Virginia.
